want encounters another who can supply it. These people are aided by the ready hand, the sincerely interested mind and the pleasant smile. It makes the customer grateful, the owner of the establishment is enriched and the sweet-mannered young woman makes a growth in true womanliness and refinement every time she exercises patience and tact and good taste, and makes a tiresome necessity pleasant.

Yesterday a friend thought she had seriously tried the endurance of a charming young girl, and said: "I have given you so much trouble today that I will have to promise not to bother you again for a month."

The young saleswoman, in handing her customer the ribbons which had been so hard to match, said, with a delightful smile: "Don't stay away a month, please."

"The lady who had been sorry to be so particular came away quite in love with her gracious young helper, and said:

"I would go a long way to have the pleasure of buying anything from that lovely girl."

Do you see how threefold the benefit was? The shopper, a delicate woman, was made to forget fatigue, the firm won a steady customer and the young saleswoman made a true friend.—Mrs. Clement Farley.

Treatment of Freckles.

The fact that freckles are the usual penalty exacted by nature for the bestowal of a delicate complexion in no way compensates any daughter of Eve for their unwelcome presence. The poet may call them "the kisses of Apollo," but she prefers to dispense with the attentions of the sun-god. Probably the least offensive and disfiguring of all skin blemishes, they are the most obstinate to remove. Dermatologists have tried in vain to compound a remedy which should be a permanent cure. It has yet to be found. True, they may be faded, even removed in many cases, after persistent treatment, but, with the advent of the warm spring days and summer winds, they are very apt to reappear. The summer girl, inclined to freckle, who yet justly refuses to be housed when sun, sky and sea woo her, has on hand a perpetual problem.

Freckles are divided into two classes: cold or constitutional freckles, and summer or light freckles. The latter fade gradually, or yield for a time, at least, to mild lotions. The former require almost heroic treatment, which then frequently brings disappointment. It is impossible truthfully to "guarantee" a freckle cure. The very situation of the freckle—below the surface—offers an obstacle. One difficulty in the way of their removal lies in the wide difference in the texture of different skins. A freckle lotion that will have no effect upon one's complexion will irritate and blister that of another.

The chief ingredient which enters into many freckle lotions is acid. An acid will bleach the spots when it reaches them. It must have usually something to draw them nearer to the surface. Ordinary massage of the face will do this gradually, and, by promoting the activity of the skin, in a manner prevent the small deposits of iron. Good facial circulation is a foe to most facial blemishes. The commonest acid and the most effective is lemon juice, pure or diluted, as the skin dic-

Piano Keys.

Did you clean your ivory piano keys and knife handles with alcohol? A solution of two-thirds of alcohol and one-third of sweet oil will take ink stains from wood. But if they are fresh stains and not large, before trying that take a soft cloth, breathe upon the stain, then rub gently while the spot is damp and soft from the breath, and there are ten chances to one that the spot will rub out without trouble.

For Brass Beds.

Some of the newest coverings for brass beds are made of heavy white linen, with lace or hemstitched edges, while in the center is the owner's monogram, embroidered in rose or white flax threads. More simple coverings for a young girl's bed can be made of some of the many graceful designs of cretonne. A most appropriate one is made from a design which has bunches of poppies scattered over a white ground. Bright red, pink or yellow coloring upon the white ground often give the needed touch of warmth in an otherwise cold room. If the daffodil be more often satisfactory in combination with the other furnishings of a room than either red or pink, it may be used.

MUCH EMBROIDERED GLOVES

The Stylish Things to Wear on the Hands This Summer.

For afternoon and evening the spring modes in gloves have novel features. Pure white and very thin suede, embroidered elaborately in black or a color, is of the novelties novel. Embroidery is considered especially appropriate on the long gloves. The needlework begins at the back of the hand, goes wreathing gracefully around the arm and flowers in a petal shaped edging at the end, somewhere in the region of the shoulder. Some brave spirits are exploiting with their black evening gloves, long black suede gloves brilliantly embroidered in silver, into the mesh of which an occasional rhinestone is woven.

With black gloves it is not at all out of the way to wear gaudy de sude in gun metal color enlivened by a dazzling row of rhinestone buttons set in gun metal frames and running from the wrist nearly to the shoulder. White gloves of this same type have been seen with little round bullet turquoise buttons, and on the arm a bracelet or two is worn just to show the glitter of the jewels against the dusky skin surface.

With shepherdess straw and posy muslin long gloves or white embroidered mittens will be worn when summer luncheons, summer morning dances, etc., begin. These mittens are woven in reality of a very stout black silk thread, and then, in fanciful designs, wreaths and points and circles of black lace are judiciously applied. The top of the mitten is made fast, by two straps of black satin ribbon, to the shoulder and a half thumb of net holds everything firm about the hand. In our mid-summer when gloves in the evening seem intolerably hot, and yet, with dancing gowns of silks or organdies, every woman wishes for some not only useful, but highly ornamental and display a white hand and brilliant rings to the greatest advantage.

WILL WED SENATOR CLARK'S SON.

Miss Mabel Foster to be Bride of William A. Clark, Jr., the Heir of Montana's Multi-Millionaire

In the above picture are represented photographs of Senator William A. Clark, of William A. Clark Jr., and of the beautiful young lady to whom the young man will soon be married, together with the magnificent residence on Fifth Avenue, N. Y., where they will live. This residence and a million dollars were presented to his son by Senator Clark as a wedding gift.

expert speakers on topics relating to the work from Canada, Holland, and this country, is promised. The affiliation between this association and the work in Canada has been close since the annual meeting held at Toronto last autumn.

The publication by Mrs. Flora Adams Darling of a history of the disruption of the two societies of Revolutionary Daughters really makes only more widely known what was pretty generally known before. In point of fact, however, the question of lineal or collateral descent was settled before the D. R. formed their separate society. In the early history of the D. A. R. a few members were admitted on collateral descent, but almost immediately this plan was altered, and from that time the lineal descent clause has been as prominent in the one society as in the other. Efforts to reunite them three or four years ago seemed about to succeed, but the proposition put forth by the D. A. R. was not satisfactory to the D. R., and was rejected in annual convention by the latter society. Mrs. Fairbanks, the new president general, will not allow herself to be brought into any discussion of the matter, evading all attempts with the discreet state-

The selectmen could not explain matters, but inwardly charged the affair to the prank of village boys.

The ship sailed away without the new mast. For several years the three girls kept their secret concerning this incident, which is now famous in the annals of Vineyard Haven.

account of its tendency to spot and also to fade. A tablespoonful of black pepper added to the first water in which they are washed will obviate this difficulty, keeping them both from spotting and fading. They should be washed in cold water; the pepper will aid in softening the water, somewhat as soda would do, though of course with less effect. Hard water is always bad for washing anything, even though softened by boiling. When any material with a buff or gray background has faded in the wash it may be wet and dried several times and bleached in strong sunlight until it becomes white.

Courtesy in Business.

Those whose lives lead them into the more sheltered paths will not begrudge these few words to their young sisters who are called every day to patiently help others in shop or work-room, or office or factory; we must not forget that all these associations are really, whatever gain we desire ourselves, ways of helping the world's progress and doing good. No one can imagine what a delight it is to find a truly gracious young girl waiting and ready to aid her customer, whether it is behind a counter, in a fitting-room, in a milliner's shop, or wherever else the woman who has a
